Local Work & National Impact

When we talked to YIMBY elected official Noelia Corzo, she said it best: “If you can’t celebrate with the people you’re doing the work with, then what are you doing?”

If you’re reading these pages, you’ve very likely been part of the YIMBY movement’s startling successes in 2022. Whether you’re a housing supporter who called in to a Planning Commission to say “yes” to new homes, a Lead who started a chapter, a Watchdog who pored over city reports, or a donor who chose to give to a vision of dense and thriving cities, you made this incredible year possible.

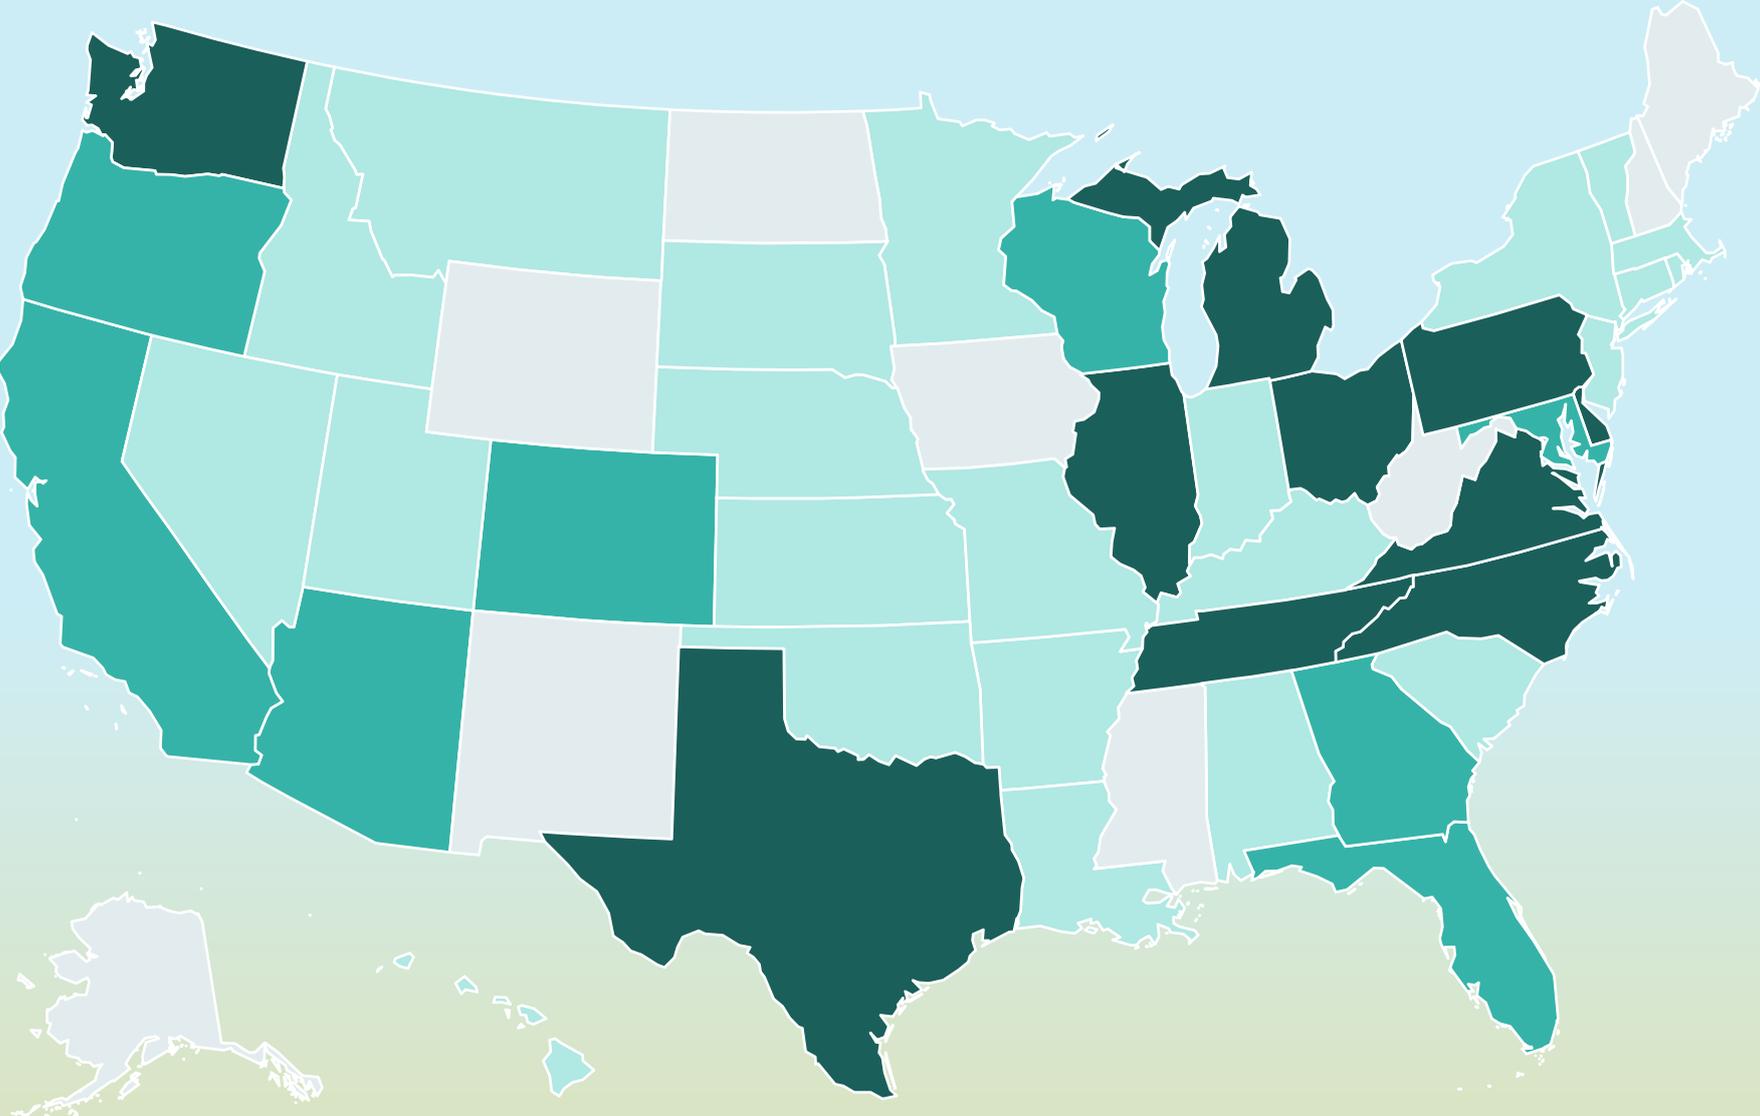

It hasn’t been an easy year. In places like Gainesville, FL and Northern Virginia, new YIMBY chapters formed in response to outrageous acts of exclusion from housing opponents. In places where YIMBY organizing has been strongest, like San Francisco, CA and San Mateo County, CA, our momentum sparked political backlash that led to some disappointing losses. YIMBY Law sued more cities in 2022 than ever before, a sign of our movement’s power—but also a sign that cities continue to frustrate housing law, choosing to hoard opportunity rather than do what’s legal—and what’s right. And every day, the problem of housing scarcity persists. Too many of us and too many of our neighbors still struggle to make rent, or stay in their community, or move to where their dreams are.

But the YIMBY model is working. Across 42 states, you’ve proven that when people get together and get loud for housing, things change. In 2022, you helped elect 55 YIMBY candidates, pass 21 YIMBY ballot measures, pass 10 landmark California bills, and win 3 major lawsuits. These wins helped YIMBYs build even more power: in 2022, we grew to over 44,600 activists. We attracted over 430 media stories.

With all of this power and all we accomplished together, what’s possible in 2023? We hope that you stick with us to find out. To all of you: our YIMBY supporters, volunteers, candidates, donors, and friends, thank you for being part of this!

We added 18 new chapters and expanded to 10 new states.

The network of YIMBY volunteers grew dramatically in 2022. In January 2022, the Brookings Institute called YIMBY Action the largest group of affiliate pro-housing organizations in the country.

By December 2022, there were eighteen additional chapters on the map and new members were being added daily. YIMBY members are by far our movement's greatest strength.

VOLUNTEER SPOTLIGHT

Jane Green, YIMBYs of NoVA

I started getting more politically involved and following local politics by attending a debate for a county board election. All three candidates were presenting growth as if it was a problem. As someone who was new to the city and had a new kid, this experience left me feeling really bad that new people were seen as a burden. So, I wrote an op-ed on our local news site posing the question “Am I a Burden or an Opportunity?” That article got some attention from the local YIMBYs and I started attending their events.

For me, there is a core belief that we should welcome people. And as someone who loves apartment living, I think there should be way more options for people like me who enjoy the flexibility of renting. To me, YIMBY is a primary vessel to get more people engaged. And that’s what I think separates us from other groups. We focus on getting turnout from average people and renters, especially.

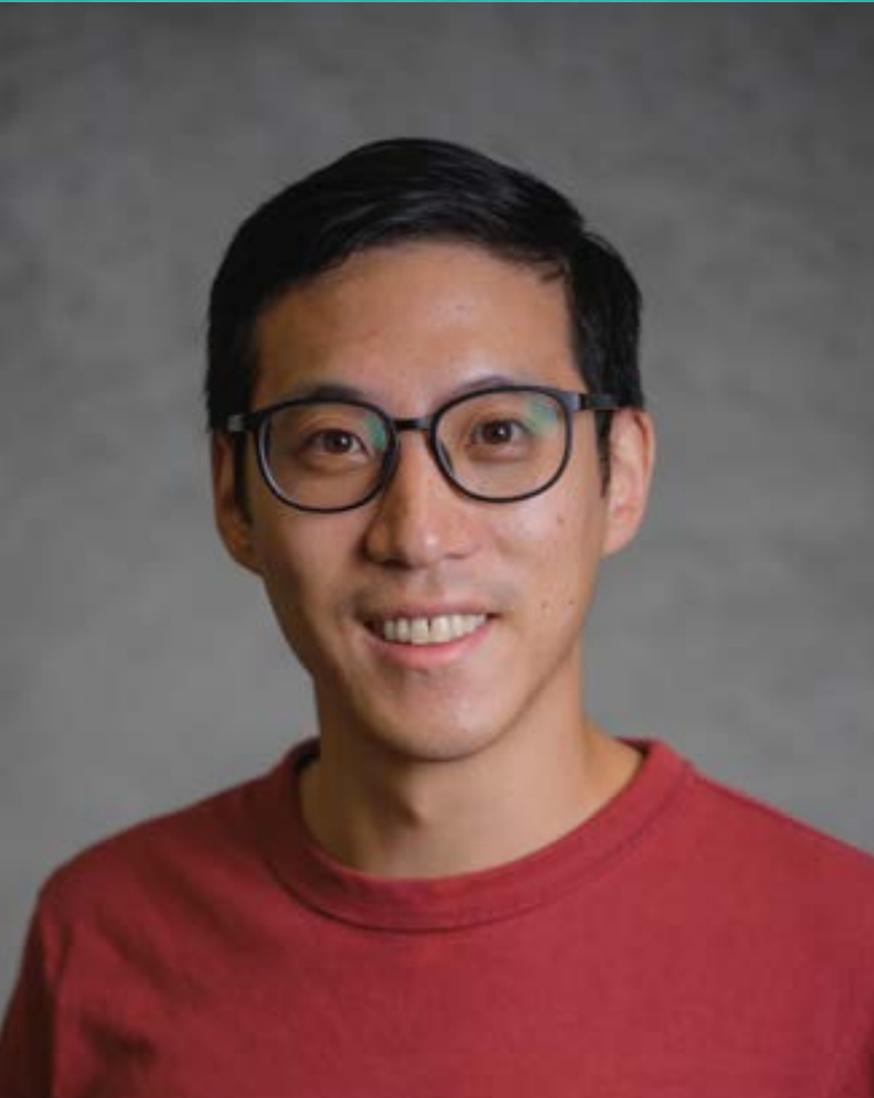

I think if you’re a person or community that isn’t welcoming new people, then you’re operating from a scarcity mindset and all of your policies and decisions will be tainted by that mindset. Rather than believing that housing and resources is a limited pie that shrinks, people need to understand that this is not a zero sum game. We’re not dividing up smaller pieces of the pie because we have more people. With more people the pie grows - More people, more pie!

To me, YIMBY is a primary vessel to get more people engaged. And that’s what I think separates us from other groups. We focus on getting turnout from average people.

No other grassroots group envisions abundant housing for people at all income levels as its guide, and also understands how much it intersects with other major issues

There were lots of important elections in our region in 2022. We endorsed in almost every jurisdiction. Then we put in the work to get our endorsees elected; many volunteer hours were deployed. I personally canvassed, phone banked for, and donated to six pro-housing candidates running for office. Three of those won their races!

No other grassroots group envisions abundant housing for people at all income levels as its guide, and also understands how much it intersects with other major issues. YIMBY is one of the few groups that are able to recruit and retain volunteer organizers, who find new supporters, do their homework, and have fun doing it.

Luchia Brown, YIMBY Denver

Knowing we're on the right side of history and becoming a force to be reckoned with for housing is very exciting

I have two college-aged sons and I would like them to be able to afford to live in the city they grew up in, but right now they can't. Also, my husband and I live in a home that we never would be able to afford today. Based on the lack of housing options and outrageous prices for homes, we won't have the opportunity to age in place in the community we love and have given so much to.

This is why I show up at city council meetings with our YIMBY Chapter and write letters. It's the incremental things that seem small but matter a lot. Knowing we're on the right side of history and becoming a force to be reckoned with for housing is very exciting. People are showing up, voting, and speaking out. We're growing and that feels good!

Abhinav Kaul, YIMBY Denver

The more housing options we have, the better our neighborhoods are, and the more we can make sure people are not displaced

One of the first things I worked on with my chapter was a group living amendment. Denver had increased the number of non-related people who could live in the same house from two to five. A group of NIMBYs pushed for a ballot measure to repeal the change. I collaborated with a council member to write a resolution in favor of the amendment and get it endorsed by local Democrats. With that momentum, we organized to oppose the NIMBY ballot measure and we won! I was very proud of that work. The more housing options we have, the better our neighborhoods are, and the more we can make sure people are not displaced.

LEADER SPOTLIGHT

Grace White, YIMBYs of NoVA

I'm excited that a lot of renters are joining me in talking about housing. We have even outnumbered the NIMBYs at local hearings!

Living as a young person in Arlington and working in the coffee industry, housing is always at the forefront of my mind because it's so expensive. I know many people with long commutes from their homes to their jobs and I think that's wrong.

We have even outnumbered the NIMBYs at local hearings about missing middle housing! Educating people about what we can do about expensive housing has been a real highlight in my work with YIMBY.

I'm excited that a lot of renters are joining me in talking about housing.

Mercy Housing & National Board Member

What makes YIMBY special is that it is totally member driven. It's volunteers working with the little to no free time they have to make sure that others are housed.

My interest in housing issues began when there was a navigation center that was being proposed in San Francisco. I attended the meeting and was shocked and ashamed that so many folks came out against the center. YIMBY was present and trying to inform folks. Seeing that injustice drove the foundation I worked for to action, and we made a grant to YIMBY. We were learning that in trying to uplift low-income families and BIPOC communities, it all came down to housing. That started my journey.

This year, it felt like YIMBY was the overnight success story that was 20 years in the making. In local elections this year, people understood housing issues, and YIMBY was driving that effort. North of 50 elected individuals showed up to the YIMBY gala this year! It's incredible how much the movement has grown.

What makes YIMBY special is that it is totally member-driven. It's volunteers working with the little to no free time they have to make sure that others are housed. I feel very proud.

BOARD SPOTLIGHT

Andrew Lie, Peninsula and South Bay Board

I was shocked at the barriers to development I learned about in the process of trying to build new housing for educators. Why is it so hard to create needed homes for our community?

As a Trustee for the Jefferson Union High School district, I have seen the impacts of our housing shortage through the lens of education. We have seen over and over again that we can't provide quality education to our children if they aren't stably housed. And we can't retain great teachers if there is no affordable housing available near where they teach.

That's why, as a district, we proposed the Serramonte Del Rey Neighborhood, which includes housing for educators and staff. I was shocked at the barriers to development I learned about in this process. Why is it so hard to create needed homes for our community?

This is where I met YIMBY and knew I needed to get involved. Many YIMBYs came out to support our new neighborhood, at government meetings and at rallies. I attended YIMBY Prom for the first time in 2021 & joined the Peninsula and South Bay Board in early 2022. Since then, I've enjoyed my time on the Board and am very proud to be a part of the YIMBY community.

DONOR SPOTLIGHT

Sarah Rogers

Over time, I began hearing and reading more and more about our housing shortage, and feeling like housing was the key to everything. I also noticed that my neighborhood was very resistant to adding new homes. I decided that I needed to be on the right side of history, so I gathered with some local neighbors to form a pro-housing group. That's how I connected to YIMBY.

Three years ago, I felt like regular people didn't know any of this stuff, and now friends across the political spectrum are like "this system is ridiculous! We need to build more housing!". There's still many people who oppose new projects and haven't connected all the dots, but it's wild to me how much more willing people are to vocalize their support for housing. I attribute that to the YIMBY movement.

As a donor, this is the best money that I can donate. There are so many impressive people involved. I don't have a million dollars to give, but even in giving what I can, I know that I'm making a difference.

I love sharing YIMBY wins. One friend told me: "YIMBY is the beating can-do heart of the city right now." YIMBY is the spirit of progress and optimism.

Legislative Wins

In 2022, we championed legislation to create more infill & walkability

Press conference for the signing of California's AB 2011, a priority bill in 2022. Photo by YIMBY Staff Member Gillian Pressman.

CALIFORNIA

In 2022, all 10 of our top priority bills in California passed. AB 2011 was particularly important as it is a significant labor deal which will help future bills to pass. We also hosted a successful Housing Element roundtable, gaining credibility and forging relationships for future coalition possibilities. Finally, we sponsored AB 2053, a social housing bill, and we'll be sponsoring a similar bill in 2023.

ILLINOIS

CUrbanism Club, YIMBY Action's chapter in Champaign, IL, had its first victory in 2022 when they helped legalize Accessory Dwelling Units! Members showed up at the City Council to encourage them to support incremental development, drove traffic to the survey on the city's website (which got a record number of responses), and made comments at Planning Commission and City Council meetings in support.

All 10 of our priority bills in California were made into laws

ASSEMBLY BILL 2011

This bill allows housing to be built with a streamlined process on underutilized land zoned for commercial uses such as office, retail, and parking.

ASSEMBLY BILL 2097

AB 2097 prohibits unnecessary parking requirements on housing near existing public transit, reducing car dependence.

ASSEMBLY BILL 2234

AB 2234 speeds up the hidden “post-entitlement” permitting process by creating a framework to process residential building permits more cost-effectively.

ASSEMBLY BILL 2221

This bill accelerates Accessory Dwelling Unit production by clarifying ADU rules for local governments and homeowners.

ASSEMBLY BILL 916

AB 916 allows any house, condo, apartment, or ADU to reconfigure existing space to add up to two bedrooms without requiring a local public hearing.

ASSEMBLY BILL 2886

This bill stops cities from abusing loopholes that have been weaponized against important affordable housing projects intended to be streamlined by SB 35.

SENATE BILL 6

This bill upzones commercial corridors, and requires skilled and trained labor standards (union labor) or prevailing wages.

SENATE BILL 922

SB 922 increases key transportation investments including bike lanes, light rail, bus rapid transit, and pedestrian infrastructure projects.

SENATE BILL 886

SB 886 streamlines housing permitting for all housing projects for students, faculty, and staff by public universities, provided that the projects meet environmental, labor, and tenant protection criteria.

SENATE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT 2

This allows California to vote to allow local governments to build or buy affordable housing without voter approval.

YIMBY was of great help to me in my campaign in 2022. By endorsing me, you elevated my platform and gave me access to other pro-housing candidates, activists, and constituents. Thanks to YIMBY, I really felt a sense of belonging.

To me, housing near where you work is a human rights issue. Thousands of people who work in our city and make it great can't afford to buy or rent here. So they spend hours of their lives commuting. They can't be part of their own kids' after school soccer practice or help their kids with their homework. It's morally unjust that a whole swath of our human population is coming in to serve our city, but are not welcomed as residents and cannot send their kids to our schools. All of that time on the roads isn't good for the environment, either.

I'm excited for this year, recognizing that I have so much to learn. I want to prove worthy of the YIMBY endorsement.

ELECTED OFFICIAL SPOTLIGHT

Rep. Maxwell Frost (D-FL), US House of Representatives & Orlando YIMBY Member

I found out about YIMBY on Twitter. Orlando YIMBY's first post-lockdown meeting was being advertised and I kept seeing people talking about it. So, I googled YIMBY and was all about the housing policies! The thing about YIMBY that really attracted me was that it brought all sorts of stakeholders to the table; developers, homeowners, tenants, local politicians, national politicians. You go to the happy hour and it's an eclectic group of people and it's really exciting. It's power building!

The issue is personal. I'm from a town that has one of the worst housing problems in the country. During the campaign, I got priced out of the place I was living in. I spent almost everything I had in my savings to stay in an Airbnb. After my Airbnb, I was houseless. I couchsurfed during the campaign. Then I got elected, came to DC, and still had the same problems. There's a reason why Orlando YIMBY started these past few years. Our housing problem has really hit this peak where people have had enough.

When we think about the issue of housing, it really impacts the root cause of all of the other issues. Housing justice is racial justice, it's economic justice. It's pro everything.

ELECTED OFFICIAL SPOTLIGHT

Noelia Corzo,

Supervisor, San Mateo County

I chose to support housing as part of my campaign because I know so many people who don't have access to affordable housing and people who are being pushed out of the communities they love. My own family was evicted at the beginning of the pandemic, so I've seen first-hand what the impact is when we do nothing. I felt powerless that I couldn't keep my family housed. When I got to the point that I decided to run for Supervisor, I was done feeling powerless. I really made a decision based on the feeling that I had nothing left to lose. My family had moved away and people around me were suffering. So, the question was, what do I and my community have to gain if I win? That gave me hope, and I knew that it would give others hope, too.

The YIMBY movement did a lot to support my campaign. There was door knocking, donations that came from YIMBYs that I definitely needed, and of course the YIMBY endorsement. My team and I are all in on the YIMBY movement.

I felt powerless that I couldn't keep my family housed. When I got to the point that I decided to run for Supervisor, I was done feeling powerless.

Project Advocacy

YIMBY Law & YIMBY Action supported a record number of new homes.

This year, we advocated for a record number of homes. In Georgia, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and California, we supported over 100,000 homes. We also made it easier for our Chapter Leads to manage projects by giving them direct access to our project database. We have many active projects in the pipeline and are on track to double the amount of housing we support in 2023!

Legal Actions

YIMBY Law won lawsuits across the state of California.

CASE WON

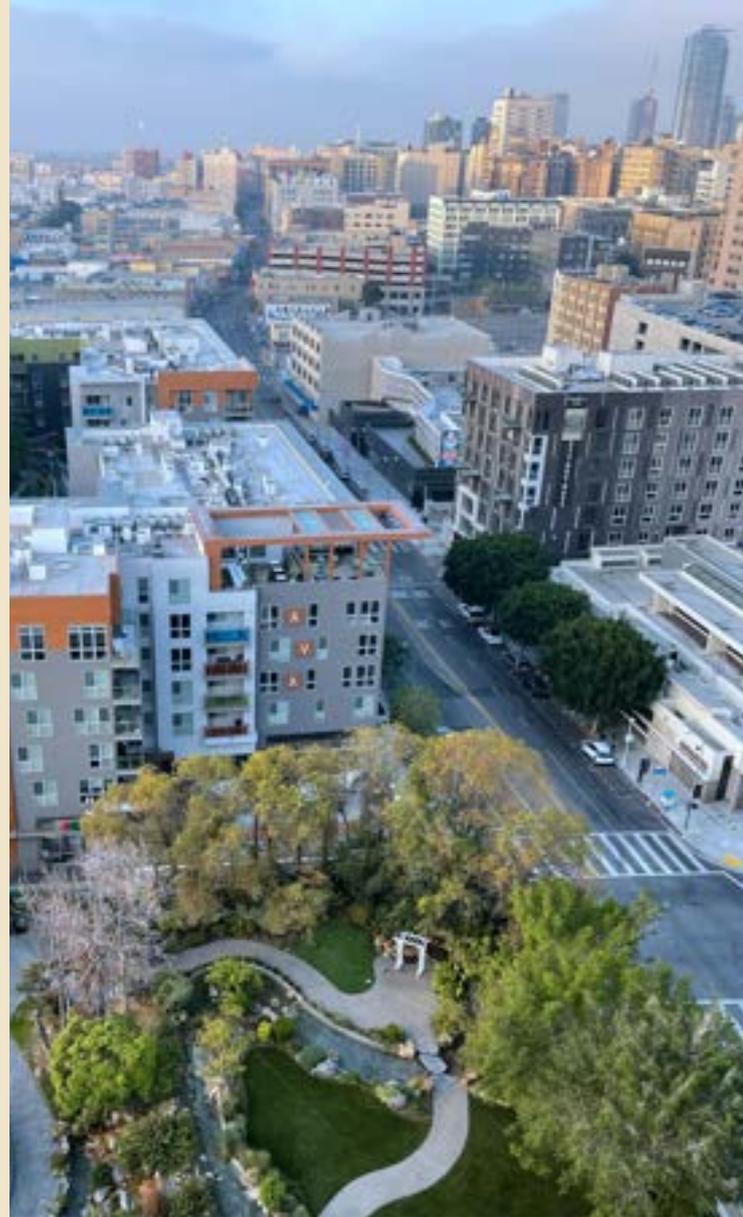

Successful challenge to illegal downzoning in Culver City

A judge ruled in favor of more multifamily housing in Culver City. The city attempted to add a square foot restriction to duplexes, which would have made them impossible to build. The city also sought to illegally downzone single-family zoned areas by arguing that it wasn't possible to further downzone single-family zones. This win will make it easier to turn single-family homes into duplexes and small apartment buildings in the city.

CASE WON

Los Angeles to allow higher density

YIMBY Law won a lawsuit at the Superior Court against the City of Los Angeles after the City illegally denied the construction of over 60 apartments. The City was not in compliance with the Housing Accountability Act (HAA), which requires cities to allow housing at the density in the General Plan, even if the zoning only allows lower densities. This ruling will ensure that cities approve housing densities at higher levels than ever before, meaning more opportunities for the diverse housing options.

AND EVEN BETTER

Attorney's fees won back for YIMBY Law

In both our Culver City and Los Angeles cases, judges ordered that the cities recoup YIMBY Law's attorney's fees —with a multiplier! We were granted 150% of our attorney's fees for Culver City and 130% for LA, a total of $303,813.58 recouped. This means every dollar donated to a YIMBY Law lawsuit doesn't just fund one lawsuit, it could also be recycled and multiplied to fund multiple future lawsuits!

YIMBY Watchdogs Enforced and Implemented Housing Elements

California cities are required to create housing plans called “housing elements” every eight years, and it could result in millions of homes being built across the state. YIMBY Action and YIMBY Law launched the Campaign for Fair Housing Elements in 2021. Since then, we built a robust network of watchdogs that monitor and report on local housing decisions.

In 2022, the Campaign facilitated more enforcement and gathered data to support housing element compliance and implementation across California. In one key win, the City of Alameda used its housing element to undo a 50-year-old ban on apartments.

This oversight played a crucial role in implementing key pro-housing laws passed due to YIMBY support, including the Housing Accountability Act, SB 9, and SB 35.

WATCHDOG SPOTLIGHT

Anne Paulson, South Bay YIMBY

I've always been pro-housing and pro-transportation. But I'm a boomer. When I was younger, there really wasn't a pro-housing movement. I had to wait for the YIMBYs to be born.

Watchdogging got me excited about working with YIMBY Action. It's always useful to understand what is going on in your city. If you're a local Watchdog, you're the person asking critical questions. Where is the building happening? What should be going on here?

YIMBY Action does wonderful work with legislation. But we have to do this gritty, local work too. Each city, you chip away at their exclusionary zoning, and you chip away at their ridiculously convoluted processes. It's not always huge, but if you put in one 30 unit project, that's 30 families that get a place to live.

The bottom line is: we need more housing. And in California, this is the way we're going to get it. Make them build one affordable housing project city by city. Make them do tenant protection city by city. Make them upzone.

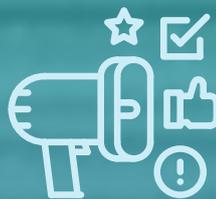

The bottom line is: we need more housing. And in California, this is the way we're going to get it.

Looking to 2023

A Letter from the Executive Directors

In 2014, Sonja was working at a bakery and Laura was in entry-level sales. We found each other because we were angry about the same thing: the rent was too damn high. So we went to the local planning commission, and we started speaking out for housing.

As we raised our voices, more people started reaching out to us to learn how to support housing. We became organizers overnight! Together, with our neighbors, we spoke about the effects of housing scarcity: high prices, mega-commutes, overcrowding, homelessness, mass displacement, and continued segregation.

As the movement has grown, so have our families. We both have kids now, and they bring a new fire to our fight for abundant, affordable housing.

While our kids are still too young to advocate for housing in planning commission meetings, it's up to us to create abundant, affordable, equitable, and sustainable communities; for our kids and everyone's kids. And YIMBY is doing just that. Together we're showing up—and we're winning. In 2022, we endorsed dozens of candidates in five states, supported over 100,000 homes, won four lawsuits, and even got one of our members elected to Congress.

In 2023, we'll grow the YIMBY movement even more. We need more pro-housing champions in office. We need to pass bold pro-housing laws. We need to mount strong legal action to enforce those laws. We still have so much to fight for.

Thank you to everyone in this movement. We can't wait to continue the work with all of you. Here's to 2023 and to abundant, affordable housing for everyone!
